Charles Dickens once said „Procrastination is the thief of time, collar him” In my opinion, he wanted to say that postponing your plans is a time-wasting.

From my point of view, procrastination seems to be terrible, but it also has some good points. On the one hand, avoidance of important plans can hurt you psychologically. When you procrastinate, when you procrastinate, you don't do your plans and don't have a rest. You just keep wasting your time, while feeling anxiety because of your uncompleted tasks. On the other hand, if you procrastinate often, it's a sign for you to think. If you hesitate so much to do your job, then is it really what you like doing? Maybe you need to find something that is more interesting for you or you should think about the reasons why it is important to do something that you don't want to.

I, personally, had such an experience. I used to procrastinate so much because of the homework. I always left it until the last moment and I didn't really like studying. This summer, as I was going to the 11th grade, I was worried about how much I will have to study. However, as I thought about it, I understood that

I must study hard to pass the exams with flying colours go to my dream university. Now, as I've changed my attitude, I like studying, because I know what I'm doing it for.

To sum it up, procrastination isn't bad, it's just a sign for you to analyse your interests and aims in life. And remember, all people can't make their dreams come true.
